

What was the urgency of conducting e-examinations during the pandemic? What measures were put in place to prevent cheating?

This was a decision reached by Senate. Scientists are persuaded that Covid-19 will be with us for a long time and therefore the university needs to adapt its systems and processes to cope within this new reality.

In this changing context, our administration of e-examination benefited from best practices across advanced jurisdictions, which provide for safeguards against cheating through diverse modes of invigilation, including candidate identification and real-time camera surveillance. As a learning university, we continue to take lessons to improve the examinee experience in future and to provide the students with appropriate remedies in case of challenges. Solutions will be found on a case-by-case basis.
